Perhaps in response to Anthony Edwards' big game and feeling a sense of desperation, Lakers coach JJ Redick took a major gamble Sunday.

It didn't pay off.

Redick played the same five players the entire second half In Game 4 as the Los Angeles Lakers ran out of gas and fell to the Timberwolves 116-113, as Minnesota took a commanding 3-1 lead in the first-round series

Edwards scored 43 points — 16 in the fourth quarter — and added nine rebounds and six assists, but it was Redick's decision that was perhaps the key factor.
